BS EN 197 1 2011 Pdf free download by Germanischer Lloyd is an international standard for the construction industry. BS EN 197, the Construction Standard, is a part of the BSI (United Kingdom) Standards and Codes (BSi) series. The original 1993 version of BS EN 197, Version 2 2002, has recently been redesigned to take account of recent changes in industry and building technology. Phase 1 was released in October 2010 that includes Technical Specification, Product Specification and Product Safety Document (PSD). Phase 2 will be published later this year which will include Manuals, Guidelines and Terminology; Codes; Guidance documents; Notes to Adoption; Appendices; Presentation Studio Resources; Installation Guides etc. BS EN 197-1:2012 is the first part of Phase 2 to be published. BS EN 197 is one of a number of construction related standards that BSI publish on behalf of the Construction Products Regulation (CPR) Group. It has been produced by a joint working group, consisting at various times of representatives from BSI, CEN and CENELEC. BS EN 197-1:2011 defines the requirements for the design and performance of construction products and systems for use in or against built structures and gives recommendations for their use and installation. The general principles of assessment, verification and certification are also described. The code is targeted at those who specify, design, install or maintain such products and systems. The code may also be of use to those within the built environment who may inadvertently come into contact with such products and systems. The code applies to the following types of construction product: The principles described in this code may be used for all relevant materials and components including:
